

Additionally, the system may be automatically calibrated. Preferably, at least one of the bearings is provided with adjustable biasing means. For example, a grub screw and compression plate may be provided in communication with one of the bearings which can be used to increase or decrease the load of the bearing on the shaft.